G. Barnes, in the presence of Mesers. David and John Myers, all of whom are citizens of Alvarado, and were participants in the terrible affair.

Bickerstaff and Thompson had been esiding for some months near Alvarado, and it was their custom to visit the place late in the evening, and during the night to institute a carnival of robbery and other crime. Bickerstaff had assumed he name of Thompson, and was known o the mass of the community by that name. But it appears that a few individuals knew his real name. Time passed, and the criminals became bolder and their outrageous sets grew to be more unbearable. Consequently, on the fatal evening mentioned, the good citizens of he village prepared themselves with hooting apparatus for the purpose of ridding their community of these, greatest pests they had ever known. The hour at which the desperadoes scally visited them, approached, and with it came the parties for whom they anxiously looked. A feeling not unmixed with anxiety and pain was depicted upon every face. The men rode up to the horse rack and dismounted, and as sood as they had alighted a shower of ractice thus begun continued up to the places.
